"Who's Driving?" asks just that question and uses over 200 quotations from over 50 of the greatest thinkers and leaders of history to establish that the answer is not "We the People." When our economy and politics are controlled by a narrow class of the elite, democracy itself is jeopardized. The elite tell themselves they are the best, the successful, the smartest and should run things because the common people really don't know what is best for them. The problem is that history says exactly the opposite. We have about 5,500 years of recorded history controlled almost entirely by that class. Common man shed real blood, sweat and tears under their leadership. We have had only a few hundred years of widespread liberty. That is why Lord Acton told us: "Every class is unfit to govern." History recognizes that great political power presents a danger and our forefathers devised the "Separation of Powers" to protect us. Rights can and have historically always been taken away. We should recognize that the concentration of wealth endangers the "Separation of Powers" because the power politics of incumbency defeats frugality and practicality and our other basic conservative values.
